BIGFOOT MAGAZINE

COLLECTOR’S EDITION CATALOG #90
BIGFOOT FINGER FEET
You've been searching for a long time, but you've finally stumbled across the source of those mysterious footprints in the woods: this set of two Bigfoot finger puppets. Bigfoot is famous for his namesake giant feet. What is your hand famous for? Nothing! Why not give it some Sasquatch tootsies and let it taope around while people take out-of-focus pictures of it? Each foot is 2¾" long and made of soft vinyl. Just like the real Bigfoot, this set comes with one right foot and one left foot.

M6644. $3.95 set of 2.

BIGFOOT ACTION FIGURE
This 7¼" tall hard vinyl Bigfoot Action Figure is the perfect thing to hide in the bushes of your backyard. Then you and your friends can dress up in camo and look for it. If you're lucky, you'll get your own TV series. Just don't bother the real Bigfoot, let him abide in peace.

12458. $12.50 ea.

WHAT WOULD BIGFOOT DO? NOTEBOOK
When you're asking for direction in life, you could do worse than asking, “What Would Bigfoot Do?” This 56-page, 7½” x 5¼” notebook with ruled paper has a Bigfoot spinner on the front, so you can use it to answer all of life’s important questions with answers like “Eat berries” or “Freak out campers.” Bookmark ribbon.

12853. $7.95 ea.

BIGFOOT PLAYING CARDS
Probably the best use for these is playing Solitaire while camping. Just don’t be surprised if a hairy hand reaches over your shoulder and points out that you can put that black seven on the left foot.

12849. $6.95 ea.

CRYPTOZOOLOGISTS in this camp think Bigfoot might be the direct descendant of an ancient Asian ape known as Gigantopithecus. The name simply means giant ape and the theory is that it—or its descendants—crossed the Bering Land Bridge from Asia into North America. But we don’t know a hell of a lot about Gigantopithecus, mainly because all evidence we have of its existence consists of a few thousand fossil teeth and a handful of jaw bones. It had really big teeth. And really big jaws. And that is all we know. No other more useful fossils to paint a, ahem, bigger picture.

Before you flip the page in disgust and move on to the finger puppet section (and wow, are there some GO0D ones this time), hear me out. You might need to rethink your opinions of Bigfoot. It might not be just a myth. And in fact, there’s a possibility that, even if it’s not around today, Bigfoot could very well have been a living, breathing creature. Now seriously, scientifically-minded Bigfoot experts think that if it is, or was, real, Bigfoot would probably be a primate of sorts, and related to humans. How closely related? Like “I’m coming to Thanksgiving and bringing all my kids but not actually making anything” related? The answer to that depends on which Bigfoot expert you’re talking to.

Think back to high school biology and you might remember this sequence: Kingdom, Phylum, Class, Order, Family, Genus, Species. Some Sasquatch seekers theorize that the ancestors of Bigfoot and humans would have been part of the same family—Family Hominidae—which means they parted evolutionary ways between 5 and 8 million years ago. So related, but distantly, and you’re probably not required to invite Bigfoot for dinner, least of all because of questionable table manners.

Now seriously, scientifically-minded Bigfoot experts think that if it is, or was, real, Bigfoot would probably be a primate of sorts, and related to humans. How closely related? Then there’s a second school of thought on Bigfoot ancestry—a small group of Bigfoot believers thinks that Bigfoot might be in the same genus as humans, genus Homo. And if that’s the case, well, you might have to put out an extra place-setting at dinner (maybe don’t use the fine china), because that’s REALLY closely related. Homo erectus, Homo neanderthalensis, and Homo footus? Not as crazy as it might seem—(we (Homo sapiens) once shared the planet with Homo erectus and the Neanderthals. In fact, up until about 30,000 or 40,000 years ago, there were a whole lot of human-esque creatures—homínids—walking the planet, including us. Evolution experts even say there could have been as many as seven or eight different hominid species living at the same time. And those are just the ones we have records of—fossils. Just a word here about fossils: Do you have any idea how hard it is to become one? Imagine you’re an animal that dies. You have to avoid being scattered and crunched up. Your bones have to be covered by sediment pretty quickly to avoid weathering away. Those sediments have to be incorporated into the rock record. Then there has to be erosion and then someone has to come along to find the fossil, sticking out of the rock before they get destroyed by the elements again. Basically, the chances of becoming a discovered fossil are really pretty slim.

Which helps the argument for fossil Bigfoot, even if it doesn’t make the creature any easier to find. But whether Bigfoot is too distantly related to get a dinner invite, or close enough to get a seat at the table, I can totally buy the idea that something like Bigfoot might have walked the earth. Maybe even recently. I mean, eyewitness accounts and stories about Sasquatch go way back—centuries, even—so maybe, just maybe, some sort of Bigfoot-esque creature coexisted with humans if not now, then once upon a time. So stock up on your Bigfoot gear. Carry it with pride. That air freshener or lunchbox isn’t just some whimsical silliness dreamed up by Archie McPhee. No, this is about science! Evolution! Anthropology! If someone gives you guff about “believing in an imaginary creature,” just remember, you’re talking to your relative. And you’re not going to let someone talk that way about your cousin, are you? I didn’t think so.

EMERGENCY BIGFOOT
We spent many long nights in tents with complicated recording equipment to get the actual Bigfoot to make the sounds for our Emergency Bigfoot noisemaker. At one point we even coated the microphone with peanut butter to get the sounds of him snorting! This 3¼” electronic Emergency Bigfoot noisemaker includes four sounds—howl, snort, roar and groan. You know, all the noises Bigfoot is known for. Batteries included.

FINGER MONSTERS

“Here’s the church, here’s the steeple, open up the door and here’s all the Finger Monsters!” Finger Monsters are one of our best-selling products of all time. If you had them as a kid, you probably still have one stuck on a pencil on your desk at work. These 2” tall fiends are perfect for low (and we mean really low) budget puppet shows. Each one has a different excited facial expression ranging from a panic-induced menace to a menacing panic, so the possibilities are endless. Set of eight (one of each style).

M6131. $5.95 set of 8.

GLOW-IN-THE-DARK FINGER MONSTERS

This set of eight glow-in-the-dark 2” tall rubber Finger Monsters have the same eight amazing styles as the other monsters, but they glow! They’re perfect for such monster activities as hiding in the attic, peeking out of a closet or lying in wait under your bed.

M6586. $7.95 set of 8.

BLACK & WHITE FINGER MONSTERS

Each puppet is about 2” tall and would not look out of place in a photograph of Abraham Lincoln.

M6552. $4.95 set of 4.
